A PICTORIAL HISTORY
IN THREE VOLUMES
BY BRENDA KIRK FIDDLER

A 1488 PAGE LIMITED EDITION
SIX YEARS IN THE MAKING

This pictorial history includes about 6000 photographs and documents from almost 800 contributors. It has a full name index. The pictorial is printed in three 8 1/2 x 11 inch hard-back volumes of 496 pages each. The majority of photos are from Henderson County, but we have included several photos from surrounding counties. Birth and death dates, children and parents names and other family connections have been added when practical. Related historical notes have been added in many instances. Family pictures (family groups, individuals and children) total 580 pages. School groups total 196 pages. Some of the pictures are rare finds and most are earlier generations. We have also included a section showing current churches, cemeteries and schools, and a section of present day Lexington/Henderson County Scenes.

The books are expected to be ready by early May, and we will announce pick-up sites in Lexington. The price if picked up will be $60 per set. If you want the books mailed to you, please add $10 per set. Please order now to be assured of a set.

Luray, Tennessee, when the railroad was king. In 1902 Luray had a population of 50. The business operators were Edwards & Moore, L. V. Hanna and J. T. Henry; George W. Priddy was postmaster. In 1910 the population was 200. Business operators were Edward Bros, A. M. Jones, John Meadows, P. W. Moore, R. W. Phillips (blacksmith), G. W. Priddy & Son, George H. Richardson (blacksmith), Russell & Barton, J. D. Stutts (gro). George W. Priddy was still postmaster. Luray was located on the Tennessee Midland Railroad (became N.C.&St.L.) at the crossing of Mifflin and Juno public roads. In its heyday the village had the Luray Banking Company, two cotton gins, a barber shop, grist mill, stave mill and sawmill. Six passenger trains came through daily. Luray also experienced the first bank robbery in Henderson County.
